Rome History

Rome's three flowing rivers that meet in the heart of downtown have drawn travelers and settlers to the area for centuries.

Although Hernando DeSoto visited here in the 1500's, it was the Cherokee Indians who claimed Rome and Floyd County as their aptly described "Enchanted Land." The Cherokee influence is still heard in the sweet sounding names of Rome's rivers: Coosa, Etowah and Oostanaula.

In the 1830's, early settlers braved the wilderness to build new lives in Georgia's rugged up-country. Discovering the lush mountains and abundant waters, pioneers settled the town and named it Rome because of the seven prominent hills that rise above the city. Cotton became king and brought prosperity. Mule drawn wagons loaded with cotton bales and other necessities crowded the streets and lined the docks as dozens of steamers and paddle wheelers transported goods over the rivers, our highways of yesterday.

Civil War history was also made in Rome. The city sought sanctuary with three prominent forts- Attaway, Norton and Stovall- located as sentinels around the high points of the city's center. In May of 1863, John Wisdom, the "Paul Revere of the South," rode 64 miles on horseback from the west to alert Rome that the Yankees were coming. In May of 1864, Rome fell to the Union Forces under the command of General William T. Sherman. Soldiers of the Union Army occupied Rome until November of that year. When General Sherman and his men departed, they set fire to many of the structures on their "March to the Sea".

A lady pioneer, Miss Martha Berry, made one of the largest contributions to the area. In the 19th Century, Martha, a wealthy planter's daughter, began to teach mountain children in her little playhouse cabin near her home.

Her mission of "education of the head, heart and hands" led to the development of the world-renowned Berry College.

With two rivers merging to form a third, Rome has occasionally been subjected to serious flooding. The first severe flood after Rome became a city was the flood of 1886, which inundated the city and allowed a steamboat to travel down Broad Street.

In the 1890's, the city passed a resolution raising the height of Broad Street.

As a result, some of the below-ground basements of Rome's historic buildings were originally the ground level entrances.

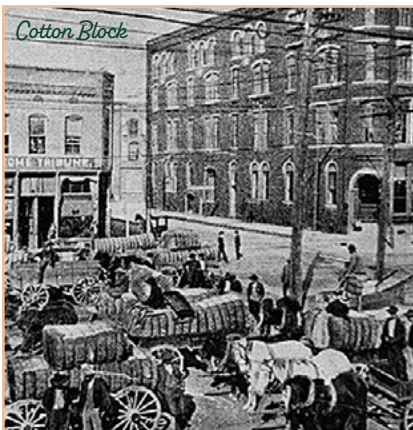

In these exciting times, a beautiful little city grew by the rivers and a lovely Victorian neighborhood blossomed beside it. Much of Downtown Rome remains in its original condition as the community's penchant for the past saved its grandeur.

Since the 1980's, citizens and the government have joined hands to restore the historic district and reclaim one of the South's loveliest cities.

As you stroll through our historic city, take note of the original architectural beauty of yesterday and the bustling life of a charming southern town today.
